There was a little fire scare at a new house on Long street the other evening, after workmen had built a brick fire in the house to dry the plaster and had then gone off. At about 9:30 the central fire station got a telephone message that the services of the firemen might be needed. So the button was pressed and the firemen were in harness in short order. Chief Gladding kept in telephonic communication with persons in that vicinity and meanwhile the horses were kept in harness ready for a call. But what fire there was the neighbors were able to handle and the department did not leave the station.

When Jessie Busley presents her new play, "In the Bishop's Carriage," at the opera house, local theatre-goers will be given an opportunity to see one of the most talked of characters of modern fiction, Nance O'Brien, the girl thief of Miriam Michaelson's famous novel.
